Yo-Yo

The trailblazing West Coast rapper is now a radio personality on Los Angeles station KDAY 93.5 FM. In addition to running the Let Your Light Shine Youth Foundation with MC Lyte, Yo-Yo's latest album is slated to drop soon.

I'd be the congresswoman for South Central L.A., the district in which I grew up. I would like to go in there and bridge the gap between old politics and new politics to help clean up my community.

Martha Stewart. She's a pit bull in a skirt!

Soul Plane. It was more ignorant than anything else. It gave publicity to something that didn't deserve it. We are stereotyped enough!

I'd take my Bible, my foremost survival tool. I'd take my toothbrush because I can't think with a dirty mouth. And I'd take a knife since it would come in handy for many situations.

Oprah Winfrey. I love her, and I have some questions that no one has ever asked her.

Romeo

He stars in a self-titled Nickelodeon series and has released several albums. As an aspiring basketball star, Romeo spent the summer of 2006 at the Reebok-sponsored ABCD and has verbally committed to playing college ball at U.S.C.

I would work at the YMCA because I love to work with kids and play sports with them. It's always good to see their smiles and know that they're happy.

I think Rachael Ray because of her youth and her quickness. You can't stop that!

Friday After Next, because Santa Claus breaks into peoples' houses.

I would take a basketball, water, and food. That's all you need to live.

I'd interview Denzel Washington. He's a strong man who can transform into different roles and characters.

Master P

The hip-hop entrepreneur (and proud papa of Romeo) has succeeded in music, television, film, clothing and other ventures, including an appearance on Dancing With the Stars. Always thinking of the kids, he has pledged to only record clean music in the future.

I would work in a children's hospital. I like to put some smiles on kids' faces. I love helping kids.

I would say Martha Stewart because I think all the stuff she went through has made her a stronger person.

Soul Plane. Look at the airplane and everything. It was just ghetto. You never see a plane that has hydraulics.

I would take food, water, and a tent. That's all you need to live.

It would be Will Smith. He has an amazing career. He went from making music to being able to conquer the film industry.

Kerri Yoder

Kerri Yoder is an actress, TV host, producer, writer, and former professional soccer player. Born in Philadelphia, she recently moved to L.A. from London, where she starred in One More Bridge, England's first Afro-Caribbean soap opera.

I would be President of the United States. I would spearhead serious health-care reform in this country. We would be saving money in the long run if we developed a system that would enable affordable health insurance for the entire population.

Martha Stewart. While she is very nice and charming, she is also a ruthless businesswoman.

State Property. It had that home-grown feel. It made people watching it feel that they could make their own movie. The movie-making experience needs to be accessible to all audiences, so this is "ghetto" in a good way.

The teddy bear my brother gave me when I was in the second grade, because it gets lonely out there with those lions, tigers, real bears, and evil, backstabbing Survivor contestants!

The Dali Lama, because I would want to know what it feels like to be in the presence of extreme calm, compassion, and wisdom. And I wouldn't mind the trek involved to get to where he resides.
